Organic Compounds in the Marine Enchytraeid Enchytraeus albidus. This work describes the first report of the metabolic capacity of the marine Enchytraeid Enchytraeus albidus (L., 1758). E. albidus was exposed to three xenobiotics (cypermethrin, benzophenone, and 4-bromobenzoic acid) dissolved in seawater and the levels of parent compound (PX), the transformed products (TP), and the remaining parent compound (RX) were assessed after two days exposure. Analytical procedures were developed to measure PX, TP, and RX of most frequent and new metabolites identified.

Fourteen metabolites (9 PX, 3 TP, 2 RX) were identified by LC-HRMS(n) (high-resolution mass spectrometry) and their structures were established using accurate mass measurements.

Metabolomic data gave information about major metabolic pathways and revealed the transformation routes of xenobiotics in E. albidus. Pesticide metabolites were detected in five cases, with the predominance of a hydroxylated metabolite. Benzoate metabolism occurred in the following order: phenylacetate > hydroxylated and monohydroxylated benzoate > dihydroxybenzoate > monohydroxylated benzoate. Many biotransformation products (TP) were investigated in this work for the first time. This study highlights the wide metabolic capability of E. albidus and their potential importance for benthic-atmospheric exchange of xenobiotics. Picture (at top of sidebar): Found this picture in the attic, it was buried in a pile of photos and other things I had to throw out. I like to take pictures of things I find, and wish I had a better idea of where they came from... always looking for another picture! I think it's great that I can revisit things like
